With 75 feet of frontage on Lake Delavan, this spacious 4,500-square-foot vacation home was built with lake living in mind. In addition to being the perfect weekend getaway for any family, this home was designed to be the ideal spot for entertaining guests. The two-story shingle-style retreat sleeps up to 17, plus a carriage house for additional guests. “We designed the home around entertaining and the lake,” says Scott Stonebreaker, president of Scott Stonebreaker Builders. “We created a nautical feel throughout, with curved windows and walls.” The home’s open floor plan encourages flow and interaction among guests, but features various private spaces—such as a push door off the main floor den that opens to a hidden office, complete with a porthole window looking out on the lake—so the owners and guests can steal some alone time. The outdoor living areas include a three-season screen porch, a patio with fire pit and hot tub, a covered terrace, and a dock with custom sitting area, making this retreat the optimal place to unwind and enjoy time with friends and family. —C.J.

THIS PAGE, ABOVE The gourmet kitchen sits in the middle of the main floor action. It boasts two large islands, and a classic mix of marble and dark wood. A backdrop of white handcrafted cabinets and satin nickel finishes provide more traditional appeal.

BELOW Designed with lake life in mind, this two-story stone-and-cedar, shingle-style home on Lake Delavan features wall-to-wall windows and a covered terrace. Balconies off the guest suite and the owner's suite maximize wide-open lake views.

OPPOSITE PAGE, ABOVE With custom millwork arches and designs throughout, the home was built with soft lines in mind. The great room anchors the main floor and offers a cozy gathering space.

BELOW With four bedrooms, loft spaces, and bunk rooms, the home can sleep up to 17. This ship-shape kids' room, with built-in bunks, is decorated in nautical fashion, with red, white, and blue accents, porthole windows, and angled, vaulted ceilings.
